

7 Factors Influencing Processing Time for Medical Staff Applications

Many factors can impact processing times for medical staff applications at initial appointment and reappointment.

1

The Use of a Credentialing Verification Organization

CVOs specialize in verifying the credentials, qualifications, background, and current competence of practitioners and can expedite the verification process.

2

Manual vs. Automated Processes

Technology can streamline application/reapplication handling, data entry, document management, and decision-making, thereby significantly reducing processing time, eliminating manual errors, and increasing efficiency.

3

Application Completeness

Incomplete applications/reapplications force MSPs to request additional details, with back-and-forth communication causing delays.

4

Volume of Applications

A high influx of applications/reapplications can strain resources and lead to longer processing times as MSPs struggle to handle the increased workload.

5

Staff Availability

Limited availability of MSPs to process applications/reapplications can contribute to delays, especially if there is a shortage of experienced MSPs or competing priorities.

6

Compliance with Regulations

Applications/reapplications that don't meet regulatory standards or require additional scrutiny due to specific circumstances can prolong processing time.

7

Complexity of Application

Applications/reapplications with complex histories, including legal issues, disciplinary actions, or malpractice claims, often require additional investigation, leading to extended processing times.

3 Ways ProVISIONary Staffing Helps Reduce Processing Times

Reduce application and reapplication processing times with ProVISIONary Staffing's...

1 Flexibility to Scale Staffing Needs

Scale your workforce during peak periods, minimizing delays caused by staffing shortages.

2 Expertise in Application Management

Tap into PVS' extensive knowledge of application/reapplications processes, document requirements, and legal compliance.

3 Industry Knowledge & Best Practices

PVS staffers stay up-to-date with industry trends and best practices, reducing delays caused by non-compliant documents.

